All About Time

- Schools with later start times enabled 60% more students to get at least 8 hours of sleep per night.
- When start times were delayed to 8:35 am or later, student’s academic performance improved significantly. Students’ grades were higher in core subjects, they got higher scores on state and national tests and their attendance rates improved while tardies decreased.
- Students who slept fewer than 8 hours nightly reported significantly higher levels of depression symptoms, caffeine consumption, and substance abuse.
- When a school changed start times from 7:34 to 8:55 am, teenage car crashes decreased by 70%.
- Kids who are sleep deprived tend to be snackers and sedentary. Sleep is tied to healthy eating and exercise.

About Time with Parents

- Parents now spend twice as much time with their children than parents did 50 years ago. (The economist.com, 27 November, 2017)
- One analysis of 11 rich countries estimates that the average mother spent 54 minutes a day caring for children in 1965 but 104 minutes in 2012. (The Economist)
- Men spend far more time caring for their children than in the past. Their time has jumped from 16 minutes a day in 1965 to 59 minutes in 1912. (The Economist)
- Mothers with a college education spend half-an-hour more with their children each day than they did in the past. (The Economist)
- Modern Parents spend more time with their children than parents at any other time since the 1960s. (Guila M. Dotti Sani, European University Institute and Judith Treas, University of California, 2012)

Compare and Contrast

- American elementary school teachers spend more hours actually teaching students than peers in 6 other modern nations. (How Much Time Do Kids Around the World Spend at School? Huffpost.com)
• American middle school and high school teachers spend more time educating students than peers in every OECD country except Chile. (Huffpost.com, Organization for Economic Cooperation)
• Overall, American teachers are required to spend 1,131 hours per year in the classroom. (The Economist, November 27, 2020, 2012 data)
• Children in Finland – one of the world’s best school systems -- receive no more than three hours of homework a week. Plus there are no exams and no grades. (Carlos Mejia, How Much Time Do Kids Around the World Spend at School? January 6, 2020)
• Children in France have 90 minute lunch breaks. (Carlos Mejia)
• In Costa Rica 98% of people age 15 to 24 can read. Costa Ricans invest 8% of their GDP on education. The United States spends about 6.4% of it’s GDP on education. (Carlos Mejia)
• U.S. Teachers see smaller salary increases than their foreign counterparts. (Huffpost.com/oecd)
• "When you look at [teacher pay] relative to the earnings of other people with college degrees, actually the United States is pretty much at the end of the scale.” (Huffpost.com/oecd, Andreas Schleicher, OECD director of education and skills)
• Considering then that teachers’ salaries are lower than others in the marketplace and administrators earn only marginally more (adapting for longer annual contracts and more advanced degrees), one can only conclude that school administrators are not competitively paid.

Red Flags 🚫
• America’s suicide rate has increased for 13 years in a row. (www.economist, November 27, 2017)
• Slow teacher salary growth contributes to high turnover. (13 percent of teachers each change schools or leave the profession. (Huffpost/oecd-teacher-salary-report)
